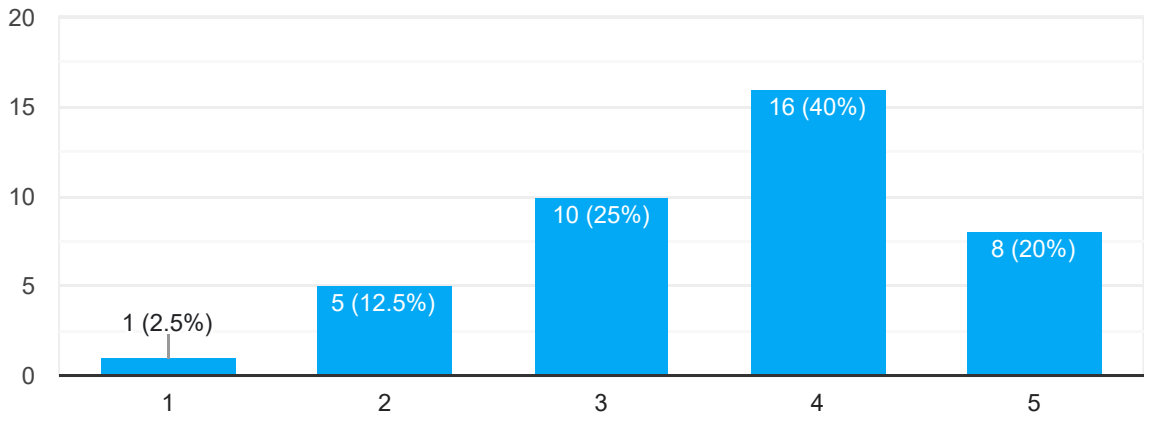
On a scale of 1-5, how body confident do you feel most days? (1 = Not at all, 5 = Totally confident)

40 responses



Share a time someone made a mean comment about your looks, how did it hit you?

40 responses

no comment

My friends joke about my height but it is always not funny and it hit me as i'm not having a good body, i set in my subconscious that's why i lack confidence.

Horrible

Not good

Rarely

Someone once made a casual remark about my appearance, and it stung at first, making me a bit self-conscious. But I reminded myself that one opinion doesn't define me, and I focused on my confidence instead.

A little while back and it hit deeply.

107

Many.. and i become more under confident about myself

Became my biggest insecurity

Never had any moment like this

No one generally comments but there are days when I hate my body when some top is so nice but It doesn't look good on me.

i was in 8th grade it was summer time may probably we had to wear half sleeves uniform in school and i also was diagnosed with type 1 diabetes so there were injection marks and all bruises on my both hands, my IT (information technology) teacher made some comments about it, setting me as an " bad " example, we were studying about interview skills and " health " was mentioned in the topic she made an comment " that's why you shouldn't be like him or your work will be delayed " it was totally unnecessary in my view
And it hit me pretty badly, as a kid and diabetic i always take care of myself and people around me but that comment made me felt like i was not one of them, it felt like i was someone that should stay away from people who aren't diagnosed with any problem because apparently that is how my school taught me to be

It was not a one time thing, but recently, even though I have been feeling better about my body, if someone constantly tries to point out a few things, even in a playful manner or for 'my betterment' it still hurts. It feels like I lost my entire progress and feel underconfident or bad about myself.

dk how to describe but mostly regarding the fit of my t-shirts/shirts/top basically

It was long back when I used to be very chubby and even though I played it off it still somewhere affected me from within.

When i was in my high school people bullied me about my body luckily it helped me transform into a healthy lifestyle

I was on a trip having pancakes and I put up a story on insta, one of my super distant relative told me “seems u have put on weight"

In my childhood my Dadi commented on my skin complexion more often....it was so mean that it is still there in my memory

Not about me, but it hurts when I hear it about anyone else

None so far

Nothing

I've been called fat when I wear skin fitted dresses I stopped wearing then ever since

Someone critised about the way I looked a certain day and it honestly felt disgusting.

Why were u sitting and dancing while the rest were standing (I have got a small height and often face such comments)

It’s now about the body but looks I have a hair on chin due to PCOD n my formed pointed out and hit really hit me hard

about my body and i felt really insecure

My friend in chilhood, shd said about my colour

My friends use to make fun of me while I was in the school days because of my skinny body.

I felt uncomfortable for a bit but I never really took it seriously.

Not to say

Sometiem helpful or sometimes bad

11:45

In my teens

at least once in a day, i mean i am now very used to it.

Never happened 🥲

Confident and confused

Badly

Have people criticized your appearance (weight, height, etc.)?

One thing society could do to reduce body shame for everyone?

40 responses

no some people

Let’s accept people with their colour of the skin,with their scars,short height,skinny or fatty people let’s appreciate imperfections.

Accept as they are

They should see themselves before speaking

Education

Society could reduce body shame by promoting more realistic and diverse body representation in media, so people see and accept a wider range of appearances as normal.

Dont judge people for how they look.

Do not judge any one by there apperance

Be more open to all body shapes and sizes and don’t make someone else feel less about themselves

Mind their own business

Changing Mindset

I honestly don't know

Body shaming starts in our family at first we should teach our own family members to not body shame anyone and teach kids in our household, then our school and teachers body shaming is seen to happen alot in school and educational institutes, and people shouldn't treat skinny or obese as differently

Just stop pointing out, or find out how the other person likes to be known of their appearance of maybe just not at all. Not everyone wants an opinion from someone else.

Mostly by uniting to get good food quality but realistically a type and brand of cloths that does magically make everyone look good in any size

Increase body positivity and decrease beauty standards.

Health awareness

It’s important to create a mutually respected space where everyone can live in the body they have, and peacefully at that.

Do not judge people on their appearance

To stop staring n passing comments about others, even when they aren't that fit

Watch their own business and be more productive

No

Not to judge what they want to wear its their choices

Just understand that all bodies are different in their own ways. Someone might be going through some medical issue because of which they might be over or under weight. They already know that. The society doesn't needs to worsen their problems by pointing it out.

Instead of criticising and bullying teach their kids to respect differences.

They should keep their mouth shut 🙄

accept

Awareness that everyone is equal

I think they should universal acceptance regardless skin color, fat of skinny.

Developing empathy to stop commenting, judging or calling by nicknames associated to body shaming, even if it's been done as a joke or to a stranger.

Not to say

I don't know

Yes

Should see everyone equally to stop judging everyone on there looks

Firstly, it's not society's fault, one should get motivated by him/her self as i reduced it from 82kg to 69kg and that's what everybody should do if they think are being bodyshamed, take it as fkin motivation and not as a shame, just remember Someone laughed at you and wake up for a run at 4 next morning remembering it , thanks 😇

See in yourself first then say it to other
